ABOUT THE TEACHER

Mollie Young is a lifelong theatre lover and practitioner, and has been teaching and directing people of all ages for the last thirty years. She teaches theatre workshops on a number of topics, but especially loves teaching games and expressive movement. She earned her MA in Theatre Education from the University of Northern Colorado, which promotes devising and process-oriented work as an integral part of its program. Mollie teaches theatre, theatre education and film studies at Wayne State College and the University of South Dakota. She has a special fondness for introducing the arts to people who might be reluctant to take part, and together discovering the joy of theatre as a huge and varied genre. She lives by the belief that there are a lot of open doors into the theatre, and a place for everyone, no matter their gifts.
